„In the 19th century, drawing gained autonomy as an artistic medium. (...) Drawing can also gain autonomy beyond all theorems in a very existential way: when it becomes the only available means of expression for the creative human being. In times of being completely confined to the most elementary artistic means of expression, a touching testimony to drawing's independence is a self-portrait by Ilka Gedő (1921-1985) from 1944. The young, artist drew it with a pencil on poor paper in the Budapest ghetto, in a situation of the greatest deprivation and hopelessness, directly threatened by deportation, from which she only narrowly escaped.”⁵
